My brand revolves around finding what suits you, not following trends.

That's a much stronger positioning.

Instead of saying:

> "Learn makeup."

Say:

> "Learn the makeup that suits your face."

Instead of:

> "Clothing Guide"

Say:

> "Discover the silhouettes that flatter your body."

Instead of:

> "Hair Guide"

Say:

> "Hairstyles designed for your face shape."

That tiny wording change makes the experience feel personalized, even if the guides themselves are general.

Luxury brands almost always have less on the page.

use this as inspo for ai generated guides, text can be added manually ensure that face shape is shown clearly

Replace Pinterest screenshots with your own style

Right now these are clearly Pinterest/reference images.

Eventually you want everything to look like it belongs to the same brand.

For example, instead of:

- random beige chart
- pink infographic
- black infographic

Create your own guides using your brand colors:

- Cotton background
- Maroon headings
- Cherry-red accents
- Black body text

Imagine every guide looking like it came from the same magazine. AI is very helpful here.

Show transformation

This is the only thing still missing.

Most images are informational.

I'd add examples like:

```
Before
↓
Analysis
↓
After

or

```
Wrong foundation
↓
Correct foundation

or

```
Cool undertone
↓
Recommended colors
```

People don't buy information.

They buy transformation.

Use AI to generate needed images.
