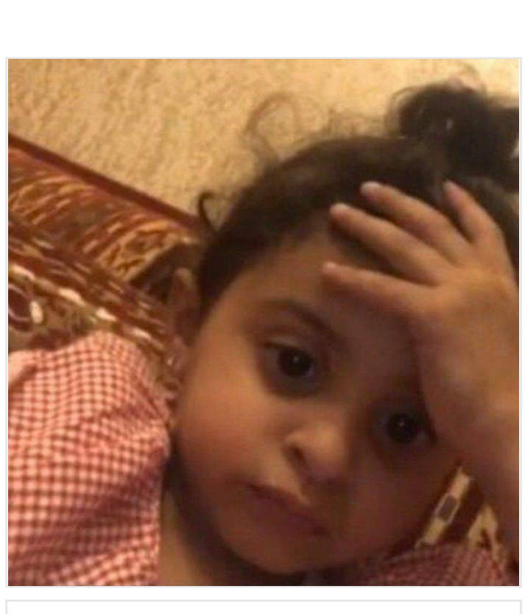
ORGANIZE



this how your customer gonna look at the screen when they open your website. why is it so messy?? ORGANIZE!

me: the many guides feel quite chaotic.

AI: I actually agree. The chaos isn't because there are too many guides—it's because they're all presented with equal visual importance.

When everything is important, nothing is.

Here's the core problem

Right now your content is organized like this:

Face Shape
Color Analysis
Undertones
Body Shape
Makeup
Clothing
Hair
Skincare
Perfume
...

To a new visitor, that's overwhelming. They don't know where to start.

Instead, organize it as a journey

People don't think:

> "I need a color theory guide."

They think:

> "I don't know what suits me."

Build the site around answering that question.

For example:

Step 1
Discover Your Features
----------------------
• Face Shape
• Skin Undertone
• Body Shape
• Hair Type

Step 2
Learn What Suits You
--------------------
• Makeup
• Clothing
• Hairstyles
• Colors
• Perfume

Step 3
Build Your Routine
------------------
• Skincare
• Haircare
• Wardrobe Basics

Now there are only 3 sections, not 15 unrelated guides.

Or make it feel like chapters in a book

Since your brand is elegant, I'd lean into the "beauty library" concept.

THE BEAUTY LIBRARY

Chapter I
Know Yourself
─────────────
Face Shape
Body Shape
Undertones
Hair Type

Chapter II
Enhance Your Features
─────────────────────
Makeup
Hairstyles
Color Analysis

Chapter III
Create Your Style
─────────────────
Clothing
Accessories
Perfume

Chapter IV
Maintain Your Beauty
────────────────────
Skincare
Haircare

That feels intentional instead of cluttered.

Even better: build around questions

Instead of categories, use the questions your audience is asking.

What is my face shape?

Which colors suit me?

What makeup suits me?

Which hairstyle suits me?

What clothes flatter my body?

What perfume matches my style?

That's a natural flow.

Your homepage shouldn't show every guide

One mistake I think you're making is trying to advertise everything immediately.

Instead, your homepage could look like:

Hero

Find Your Beauty Profile

How It Works

Featured Collections

Know Yourself

Enhance Yourself

Build Your Style

Testimonials

Footer

Then each collection opens into its individual guides.

I'd also simplify your products

Instead of selling:

- Face Shape Guide
- Undertone Guide
- Color Guide
- Body Shape Guide
- Makeup Guide
- Hair Guide
- Clothing Guide
- Perfume Guide

Sell bundles.

Bundle 1 — Discover Yourself

- Face shape
- Undertones
- Body shape
- Hair type

Bundle 2 — Makeup Mastery

- Makeup
- Color matching
- Everyday looks

Bundle 3 — Hair & Style

- Haircare
- Hairstyles
- Blow-drying
- Bangs

Bundle 4 — Fashion Essentials

- Body shape
- Clothing
- Accessories
- Color coordination

Bundle 5 — Beauty Routine

- Skincare
- Haircare
- Perfume

Five polished collections feel much less chaotic than fifteen individual guides.

One thing I would change about your business model

From everything you've shown me, I don't think your product is actually beauty guides.

I think your product is a beauty curriculum.

Think of it like learning a language:

- You don't buy a vocabulary guide, a grammar guide, and a pronunciation guide separately.
- You buy a course that teaches them in the right order.

Your beauty content should feel the same way. Guide your users through a structured path—from understanding their features to applying makeup, choosing clothes, and building routines. That makes the experience feel curated and premium rather than like a collection of random PDFs.

PLAN 3: for hijabi muslims?

I actually think this could become a much stronger brand if you do it carefully.

Right now, KASHKHATI is positioned as a luxury personalized beauty brand. That's broad, which means you're competing with everyone—from Sephora to influencers to AI beauty apps.

If you reposition it as:

> "Luxury personalized beauty guidance for Muslim women."

...you instantly have a much clearer audience and brand identity.

What changes?

Not "beauty despite modesty."

Instead:

> "Beauty that respects modesty."

That subtle difference matters.

Brand Personality

Instead of:

- Elegant
- Editorial
- Luxury
- Personalized

It becomes:

- Elegant
- Graceful
- Refined
- Modest
- Intelligent
- Timeless
- Confidence through self-understanding

The feeling should be:

> "Quiet luxury meets feminine modesty."

Visual Identity

I would shift away from the bold cherry reds.

Think:

- Deep burgundy
- Dark wine
- Espresso
- Warm cream
- Pearl
- Muted gold

The palette becomes softer and richer.

Instead of glamorous lipstick shots...

Use imagery like:

- Silk hijabs
- Pearls
- Books
- Natural makeup
- Soft lighting
- Architecture
- Floral motifs
- Satin fabrics

Very editorial.

The Products

Instead of only:

- Makeup Guide

You can have:

Personalized Beauty Blueprint

Includes

- Face shape
- Skin analysis
- Color season
- Hijab color recommendations
- Glasses recommendations
- Jewelry recommendations
- Makeup techniques
- Fragrance personality
- Haircare (private section)
- Skincare routine
- Personal style

Modest Style Guide

Shows

- Outfit silhouettes
- Sleeve types
- Fabric recommendations
- Hijab styling
- Capsule wardrobe

Wedding Beauty Guide

For brides wanting elegant modest looks.

Glow Guide

Focus on skincare and natural beauty.

AI Avatar

Instead of anime...

I'd make it an elegant illustrated woman wearing neutral clothing.

Not every avatar needs a hijab.

Some guides (like skincare or haircare) can simply avoid showing hair where appropriate or use tasteful illustrations depending on context.

The style should feel like:

- Vogue illustration
- Soft watercolor
- Fashion editorial

Not kawaii.

Website

Imagine opening the homepage.

Large serif heading.

> "Discover the beauty Allah created uniquely for you."

Then:

> "Personalized beauty guidance designed for Muslim women who value elegance, confidence, and modesty."

Everything feels calm.

No loud colors.

No flashy makeup.

What Makes You Different

Your competitors sell products.

You sell:

> "Knowledge."

You're not telling women to buy another lipstick.

You're helping them understand:

- why certain colors suit them
- why certain hijab shades flatter them
- why some silhouettes work better
- what makeup complements their features rather than following trends

That feels much more premium.

One thing I'd be careful about

I wouldn't make it feel exclusive in a way that says "only Muslims can use this."

Instead, make it clear that it's designed with Muslim women in mind while remaining welcoming to anyone who appreciates modest fashion and understated beauty. That broadens your potential audience without diluting your brand.

A refined brand vision

> "KASHKHATI is a luxury AI-powered beauty and style platform that helps Muslim women discover the colors, makeup, skincare, hijab styles, and wardrobe choices that complement their unique features. Through personalized guides rooted in elegance, modesty, and timeless style, KASHKHATI empowers women to feel confident—not by chasing trends, but by understanding themselves."

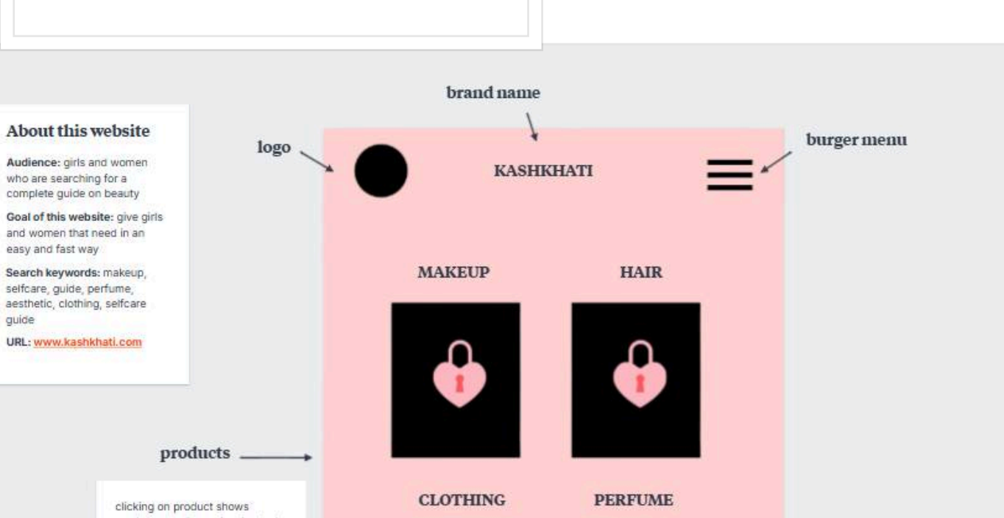
This positioning is much more distinctive than a generic AI beauty platform. It gives the brand a clear purpose, a recognizable aesthetic, and a community that is currently underserved by most beauty technology.



About this website

Audience: girls and women who are searching for a complete guide on beauty

Goal of this website: give girls and women that need in an easy and fast way

Problem

Women and girls struggle to find what beauty style/aesthetic fits them. They search through hundreds of videos and tutorials, get professional color evaluation for 2k, hire professionals to redo their wardrobe, and spend hours and hours doing research. It is stressful, time consuming, and expensive.

Goals & objectives

- Provide a personalized beauty guide that works for THEM. No need for excessive research, no need for thousands of dollars. Just a quick and easy quiz to get your personalized beauty guide.
- Easy to use, fast and efficient, cost effective.
- Relaxing and easy to navigate. ZERO STRESS, ZERO CONFUSION.
- Luxurious, classy, feminine, romantic.

Target audience

- Women and girls that are looking for what works for THEM.
- People of different cultures that don't get accommodated in the western focused fashion industries.

Competitors

- Stylix Stylix: Fashion AI Stylist - style advice, color scheme & save time.
- Eazyfit (pretty much a copy paste of stylix) Eazy Fit

Critical examination: what's weak right now

Issue	Why its risky
Guides are generic	"How to do basic makeup" already exists everywhere for free.
Too many categories at launch	Makeup + hair + clothing + perfume + skincare = five businesses at once.
No proof of expertise	Customers need a reason to trust your recommendations.
No clear outcome	People don't buy "color theory." They buy "look better in photos and stop buying the wrong shades."
Legal/medical risk	Skincare advice can drift into medical claims. Avoid diagnosing conditions.

Your idea is stronger than it looks — but it is not a "beauty shop." It is an education business.

That distinction matters because people pay very differently for products vs. information. Your current plan is essentially "personalized beauty education for young women", with guides as the product.

The website mockup is useful, but the bigger question is: why would someone pay you instead of watching YouTube/TikTok for free? If you can answer that clearly, you have a business. If not, you have a content hobby.

The strongest version of the idea

Best angle

Beauty operating system

Sell a diagnosis + roadmap, not random guides.

Example: "Tell us your skin tone, face shape, hair type, body type, budget, and aesthetic. We generate a personalized beauty plan with exact colors, cuts, routines, and shopping suggestions."

That is much harder to replace with free content because it saves time and removes uncertainty.

Positioning

Don't sell 5 separate guides

Sell one personalized transformation package that includes makeup, hair, clothing, skincare, and fragrance recommendations.

<---------------------------------------

What I would launch instead (90-day plan)

Phase 1 (Weeks 1–2): One irresistible free tool

Create a "Find Your Beauty Palette" quiz.

Inputs:

1. Skin undertone (warm/cool/neutral)
2. Hair color
3. Eye color
4. Face shape
5. Style goal (soft, classy, modest, edgy, etc.)

Output:

- Best 5 makeup colors
- Best 3 clothing colors
- 2 recommended fragrance families
- 1 hairstyle direction

Phase 2 (Weeks 3–6): Sell one paid product

$19–49

Paid Personal Beauty Blueprint

$19–49

A personalized PDF delivered within 24 hours.

Mock checkout button

- Custom color palette
- Makeup shade recommendations
- Haircut & styling suggestions
- Outfit formulas for body type
- Beginner skincare routine
- Fragrance layering pairings

Phase 3 (Weeks 7–12): Add membership

$8–15/mo

Monthly seasonal updates

New colors, trends, and outfit formulas.

Community Q&A

Members submit photos and questions.

Shopping lists

Budget, mid-range, and premium picks.

Office hours

Live review sessions and feedback.

Your categories: keep, merge, or drop

Makeup

Keep. Highest demand and easiest to personalize.

Hair

Keep. Hair type guidance is valuable.

Clothing

Keep, but focus on color + body type only. Don't become a fashion store yet.

Perfume

Merge into the blueprint. Too niche as a standalone product.

Skincare

Be careful. Keep it beginner-only: cleanse, moisturize, SPF. Avoid acne-treatment claims.

Website critique (the mockup)

What's good

Keep

- Clear navigation.
- Simple category structure.
- Mobile-first layout is the right instinct.

What's missing

Fix first

The homepage should not start with products. Hero section.

Start with one promise:

Find the colors, cuts, and routines that actually suit you.

Take the 2-minute Beauty Palette Quiz →

Then show:

1. Quiz CTA
2. Before/after examples (even illustrated)
3. What's included in the Beauty Blueprint
4. Testimonials
5. Only then the category cards

The biggest strategic opportunity

Differentiator

Localized beauty guidance

Most beauty advice online is Western-centric. You can specialize in modest fashion, hijab-compatible hairstyles, Gulf climate skincare, and fragrances popular in the Middle East.

That is a real niche with less competition.

Examples
Gray: General advice.
Orange: Your version.

"Wear warm tones"

"For olive undertones common in the Gulf, try dusty rose, camel, and deep emerald."

"Use SPF"

"Use lightweight SPF that survives heat and humidity."

"Layer perfume"

"Pair oud + vanilla without becoming overpowering."

Do NOT buy inventory yet. Physical products add shipping, returns, customs, and customer-service headaches before you know if people will pay for your advice.

How to validate before building the full site

This week

3 days

1. Build a one-page landing page.
2. Add the quiz.
3. Offer 10 free Beauty Blueprints in exchange for feedback.

Next week

Validation

Ask every tester:

1. What advice surprised you?
2. What would you have paid for this?
3. Which section mattered most: makeup, hair, clothing, skincare, or perfume?

Only then charge

Go/no-go

Sell the first 20 paid blueprints manually before writing a single line of complex code.

If 20 strangers won't pay $19, a bigger website won't fix it.

Most important: One-sentence test

Can a 17-year-old girl read this and immediately know why it's worth paying?

> "Stop guessing what suits you. Get a personalized beauty plan built for your face, hair, body type, and style."

If your homepage, TikTok bio, and product page all say some version of that, you're focused. If they say "guides, beauty, makeup, hair, skincare, perfume," you're still describing categories instead of a result.

My blunt assessment

Idea quality: 7/10

Current execution risk: 8/10

If repositioned as personalized beauty planning: 8.5/10

The opportunity is not selling beauty information. It is reducing decision fatigue for young women who don't know what actually suits them.

Build the quiz first. Manually deliver 20 personalized blueprints. Let customer questions tell you which category deserves the full course.

Best next step

Draft my quiz questions

PLAN 2

This is a much better idea than a typical beauty blog because you're trying to solve a specific problem:

> "I don't know what suits me personally."

Most beauty websites throw thousands of products at users. You're proposing personalized education.

That said, there are some serious business risks you should think about.

What's good about the idea

1. You're selling knowledge, not inventory

You don't need:

- warehouses
- shipping
- suppliers
- stock management
- returns

You create the guides once and sell them repeatedly.

That's attractive because your costs stay low.

---

2. Most girls are overwhelmed

A beginner usually doesn't know:

- what makeup suits her face
- what haircut suits her face
- what colors suit her skin tone
- what aesthetic fits her personality
- what perfume matches her vibe

Your guides answer these questions.

That's a real pain point.

---

3. The categories make sense

The categories naturally connect:

Skincare
↓
Makeup
Hair
Clothing
↓
Perfume
```

A girl interested in one is often interested in the others.

This creates opportunities for bundles.

Example:

The Complete Glow-Up Guide

- skincare
- makeup
- hair
- clothing
- perfume

instead of selling each separately.

Biggest weakness

The biggest issue:

Why would someone pay?

Most of this information already exists on:

- YouTube
- TikTok
- Pinterest
- Reddit

For free.

If you simply write:

> "This face shape looks good with curtain bangs"

people won't buy it.

Your value must be:

PERSONALIZATION

Instead of:

Guide to hairstyles

sell:

Find hairstyles for YOUR face shape
```

Instead of:

Color theory guide

sell:

Find YOUR best colors

This changes everything.

What I would do instead

Rather than selling PDFs:

Create a quiz system.

Example:

Step 1

User answers:

- face shape
- skin tone
- hair type
- body type
- preferred aesthetic

Step 2

Website generates:

Makeup

- best blush colors
- best lipstick shades
- eye makeup suggestions

Hair

- hairstyles
- bangs
- haircare routine

Clothing

- colors
- silhouettes
- accessories

Perfume

- scent families

Skincare

- routine

Now you're providing a personalized report.

That's harder to find for free.

Another weakness

The categories overlap.

For example:

Color theory appears in:

- Makeup
- Clothing

This creates repetition.

I'd reorganize.

Better structure

Beauty Foundation

- skin tone
- undertone
- color theory
- face shape
- body shape

Makeup

- products
- techniques
- looks

Hair

- haircare
- styling
- cuts

Fashion

- clothing
- aesthetics
- accessories

Fragrance

- perfume
- layering
- scent profiles

Skincare

- routines
- ingredients
- acne basics

The website itself

Looking at your mockup:

Good

- Simple
- Easy to understand
- Clear categories

Missing

You currently have:

Navbar
↓
Products
Footer

That's a problem.

A visitor arrives and immediately sees products.

Most people won't buy immediately.

Add:

Hero Section

Something like:

> "Discover the beauty styles that suit YOU"

Subheading:

> "Personalized guides for makeup, skincare, hair, fashion and fragrance."

Button:

> "Start Beauty Quiz"

This should be the first thing people see.

Add before products

Beauty Quiz

A visual section.

Questions:

- Face shape?
- Skin tone?
- Hair type?
- Body shape?

This becomes your main lead generator.

Testimonials

Example:

> "I finally found makeup that suits me."

> "The color guide changed my wardrobe."

Social proof matters.

Before/After Examples

Show:

- color palettes
- outfit suggestions
- hairstyle recommendations

People need to see the value.

Revenue ideas

Option 1

Sell individual guides

$5–15 each

Option 2

Complete beauty bundle

$29–49

Option 3 (best)

Membership

Monthly subscription:

- new guides
- seasonal fashion updates
- perfume recommendations
- trend reports

Recurring revenue is much stronger than one-time PDF sales.

My biggest recommendation

Don't market it as:

> "Beauty guides."

Market it as:

> "Find what suits YOU."

The product isn't makeup knowledge.

The product is confidence and personalization.

If you build around quizzes, personalized recommendations, and bundled beauty profiles, you have a much stronger business than simply selling beauty PDFs.
